Arabam Critics of Critica Mountain, W. Va., known throughout the State as the Braxton skeleton, died on Sunday. He was affloted with a disease that baffled all medical skill, and gradually wasted away ustil nothing was left but skin and bones. He was a little over the average height and weighed forty pounds at the time of his death.

It is feared that a contagious disease has broken out among a heard of cattle owned by W. D. Lasker of Lower Bartlett, N. H. Three have already died very suddenly. Red spots were found on their tongues, also on the tongues of others of the herd. As the three that died stood side by side in the barn it leads to the belief that the disease is contagious.
